Primary School

From the Division Head

Last week, we hosted 25 local teachers and administrators from seven different schools at our annual Educators Visit Day. It's easy to see why people want to visit the Primary School. We have a beautiful facility; abundant, high-quality materials; and, most importantly, talented teachers who are masterful in their approach to working with our students.

The visiting educators spent time hearing about our program, observing in classrooms, and touring the facility. During their tour, they heard from one teacher per grade level who highlighted one of the curriculum components that makes our program unique.

- In Pre-Primary, Jane Oteiza spoke of the storytelling curriculum that is part of each of our classes in Primary School. Story baskets, dramatizing original student stories, and other components of our Rice University School Literacy and Culture curriculum were part of her demonstration.
- In Primary I, Andrea Scriber helped the visitors learn more about the Reggio-inspired approach that is used throughout our division. A focus on the importance of valuing students' thoughts and ideas; being part of a community; and having opportunities to generate ideas, create original work, and dig deeply into project work were part of her explanation on how the Reggio approach influences our program.
- In Primary II, Cindy Blades used her documentation of project work to support her explanation of how project work begins, develops, and is chronicled throughout the year. Evidence of children's work is displayed throughout our facility and is one way we honor our students' time and creativity.

At each grade level, visitors were especially interested in project-based learning in our program. Most teachers are familiar with theme-based learning that is planned and directed by teachers. In contrast, facilitating project work requires that teachers are open to learning with and from children, comfortable in admitting that they do not have all the answers, and willing to listen to children's thoughts and ideas. Teachers must be patient and willing to nurture ideas that present themselves, without rushing the process. We must be open to not knowing how and when a project will conclude. In project work, we value the learning process and do not emphasize an end product. It's a progressive approach.

It is always affirming to have educators benefit from visits to our school. Our teachers work very hard to ensure that our program meets the needs of our students, and they are committed to sharing their professional gifts with others. Modeling best practices in our field has made St. Francis a destination for early childhood educators throughout the city. Thank you for the encouragement and support you provide for our program!

I hope you and your family have a very happy Easter!

All the best,

Amy Whitley, MA
Head of Primary School

From the Division Head

As we look toward our final trimester, our readers in second, third, and fourth grades have begun the important work of book clubs. I wanted to provide some background information on this very engaging learning opportunity. All grade levels have been working hard in reading workshop, learning numerous reading strategies from both whole-group instruction and guided reading lessons. Book clubs provide the chance to practice higher-level reading skills.

What is the purpose of book clubs?

The purpose of book clubs is to provide opportunities for children to develop lives in which reading matters. By providing a framework where students experience the shared pleasure of reading with friends, we are further promoting lifelong reading. I know many of us, as adults, enjoy participating in book clubs!

Book clubs are also fantastic avenues to promote components of our SEAL approach:

- Children must work collaboratively, meaning they will practice the competencies of compromise, shared power, negotiation, and accountability.
- They must complete the reading and prepare for the group discussion before the club meets.
- Additionally, they practice active listening and reflect on their participation in these various areas, using rubrics to assess their own work as well as that of their group.

Book clubs also teach students to read and think more deeply and independently about a text—and then to communicate those thoughts effectively to others. Book club discussions are not based on literal context, but are conversations revolving around analyzing, synthesizing, predicting, and evaluating texts. These are the highest levels of cognition, which must be modeled and practiced. Book clubs provide the opportunity for this practice, as well as the chance to listen to peers modeling these thinking processes!

What do book clubs look and sound like?

Book clubs comprise three to five children who are either reading the same book, reading books in the same genre, or reading books by the same author.

They usually have “jobs” to complete before meeting. Sometimes it may be to complete a task as the summarizer, vocabulary detector, discussion director, or illustrator. The job could also be listing observations, wonderings, or connections to the text. Simply annotating the text with pre-learned symbols is another way to prepare for a group discussion. This work provides the students with opportunities for a very rich conversation!

The groups meet in various parts of the classroom, and the teacher checks in with the group frequently to monitor understanding and facilitate this important work.

In the coming weeks, ask your child about his/her book club, and maybe even start one with members of your family. Click here to learn more about family book clubs!

Have a wonderful week!

Carol Christ, MEd
Head of Lower School

Middle School

From the Division Head

Happy Sunday and Happy Easter, Middle School families. I hope this finds you well today.

I'm beginning this letter with Billy Collins' beautiful poem about Spring, "Today":

*If ever there were a spring day so perfect,
so uplifted by a warm intermittent breeze*

that it made you want to throw open all the windows in the house and unlatch the door to the canary's cage, indeed, rip the little door from its jamb,

a day when the cool brick paths and the garden bursting with peonies

seemed so etched in sunlight that you felt like taking a hammer to the glass paperweight on the living room end table,

*releasing the inhabitants
from their snow-covered cottage*

so they could walk out, holding hands and squinting

into this larger dome of blue and white, well, today is just that kind of day.

Sometimes, it's just nice to take a moment and read something beautiful. For the next two months of the school year, I hope that we often have days like the one in the poem.

On the Mind, Brain, and Education Science front, I'm including this interesting, informative website, which showcases—among other subjects—study skills, executive functioning, memory, active retrieval, and growth mindset. Our faculty members continue their deeper dive into best practices in education, and we actively integrate these practices into our daily lessons.

Thank you all, and have a great week.

It's a beautiful day, and we are Wolves!

Sincerely,

Connor Cook, EdD
Head of Middle School
