Our virtue verse is Joshua 1:9: “Have I not commanded you? Be strong and courageous. Do not be afraid; do not be discouraged, for the Lord your God will be with you wherever you go.” Try to memorize it as a family.

Primary School

From the Division Head

Last summer, a team of Primary School teachers and administrators had the amazing opportunity to attend the Summer Symposium at the Opal School in Portland, Oregon. The Opal School is known worldwide for its Reggio-inspired philosophy and project work in the United States. We were inspired by what we experienced at this school, by the speakers at the symposium, and by the discourse with other participants representing schools around the globe.

The conference title, Growing Changemakers, sparked conversation about the definition of this term and what our school environment needs to be in order to nurture a changemaker. We want our students to become successful, confident citizens who are prepared and empowered to create a better and more just world—in other words, to become changemakers.

Over the next few months, we will share highlights from the Opal School Summer Symposium, how our teachers were inspired by this experience, and the ways in which we are using this valuable professional development opportunity to shape our approach to teaching and learning in the Primary School.

In this first edition, we feature the reflections of Leah Burrow from Primary I and Diane Wiener from Primary II on the impact of the school environment.

“As I toured the classrooms, studios, and outdoor spaces of the Opal School, I was awed by the school’s natural beauty, the students’ project work, the immense and varied amount of natural materials and loose parts, the dedicated faculty and staff members, and the documentation that filled the school. While the St. Francis landscape does not mirror that of the Pacific Northwest, our environment is equally unique and offers endless opportunities for outdoor learning and exploration. Our hallways, outdoor learning spaces, classrooms, dedicated and knowledgeable faculty and staff, documented and displayed student work, and focus on the use of natural materials and loose parts very much rivals that of the Opal School. Because of our shared vision and the ability and means to realize it, in many ways I felt at home at the Opal School. The sense of pride I felt when realizing that I was attending a conference at one of the country’s leading Reggio-inspired schools and noticing such strong similarities between our two programs was powerful. It provided me with palpable confirmation that St. Francis is on the forefront of American Reggio-inspired programs. My experience at the Opal School was extensively enriching. The knowledge and exposure I gained there will continue to influence and elevate my approach to teaching. Learning that our program could easily stand up to one of the country’s premier Reggio-inspired schools was truly satisfying and was evidence that we are among the leaders of this educational movement.”

—Leah Burrow, MEd, Primary I Teacher

“Providing classroom spaces that honor children’s needs is an important consideration in establishing an effective classroom environment. While most classrooms provide large- and small-group spaces for children, few have options for one or two students to quietly visit a topic of interest. For some students, having quieter ‘nooks’ in the classroom may encourage and allow them to more deeply explore materials or concepts. Similarly, this provides an opportunity for children to reflect on their work with little distraction. We know that children need time and space for reflection, and providing this for them demonstrates that we value that process. Establishing these spaces in the classroom also supports students who do not typically choose to participate in larger group settings due to their preferences for more intimate, quiet spaces and fewer people to collaborate with. As with learning styles and temperament, we must also acknowledge and support our students’ preference for work ‘space’ in a learning environment where they can thrive.”

—Diane Wiener, BA, Primary II Teacher

Professional development is a foundational part of our work with young children. The opportunity to learn from other professionals who are passionate about best practice in early childhood education is imperative in our journey as lifelong learners. In December, we will feature reflections from other teachers inspired by the Opal School Summer Symposium.

Sincerely,

Amy Whitley, MA
Head of Primary School

Lower School

From the Assistant Division Head

We had such a great time cheering on the Astros last week! Equally exciting were our All Saints' parties. Thank you to all of our parent volunteers for making this such a special day for our students!

On Friday, October 25, the Southwestern Association of Episcopal Schools (SAES) held its biennial conference here in Houston. The keynote speaker was Dr. Tina Payne Bryson, a pediatric and adolescent psychotherapist who specializes in child development, child-rearing, and interpersonal neurobiology. She is also the author of many books for both parents and educators. Her keynote address is worth sharing with all of you.

At the event, Dr. Bryson highlighted a simple concept of green, red, and blue zones as described in her book The Yes Brain. This is important information for parents, because learning is affected by your state of mind, which she calls "zones."

- Green Zone: People are in their green zone when they feel calm, alert, and in control of their bodies and decisions. They can think logically and access all the parts of their brain so they can listen, process information, access their memories, and learn new things. When in the green zone, people are resilient, stable, flexible, open, and receptive to learning, because the green zone is considered a "window of tolerance." The green zone enables them to consider their options and respond by making reasonable and responsible decisions.
- Red Zone: When the nervous system is triggered into high alert by something like anger, anxiety, frustration, or fear, people head out of the "window of tolerance" into the red zone. Those in the red zone feel rage, fear, stress, and high anxiety. Learning is not possible when in the red zone, because one can only access what is necessary for safety and survival: fighting (or becoming defensive), fleeing (or actively avoiding), or freezing (physically or mentally). The ability to think logically is lost, leaving feelings of being overwhelmed, enraged, rigid, obsessive, or chaotic. This causes them to react, saying or doing things they later wish they hadn't. Often, this can elicit a reactive response from others, creating more stress and making it even more difficult for them to move back into the green zone.

- Blue Zone: Those who are in the blue zone are in a state of under-arousal, such as shutting down, becoming apathetic or depressed, disconnecting, or dissociating. They are rigid, tired, numb, and withdrawn. Those around someone in the blue zone will usually react with empathy by jumping in to rescue him or her. This results in more feelings of inadequacy since others are relaying the message that the person in the blue zone is incapable of solving his or her own problems or making the right decisions.

We, as educators, strive for students to “live” in a green zone. If you sense your child moving frequently into the red zone or blue zone at home, please reach out to your teachers so we can work together to move your child into the optimal zone.

Both the red zone and the blue zone are states of dysregulation. When dysregulated, one is not able to listen or learn. People must move back into their green zone first before they can have a conversation or learn anything. Often this requires soothing, sensory supports, or strategies to calm down.

The zone in which someone spends the most time is the zone that becomes their default. Some of us have a wide green zone and handle a great deal of stress, sadness, or frustration without it triggering dysregulation. Some of us have more reactivity. When a person's green zone is smaller, it is easier to head into the red zone or blue zone with only a small amount of emotion or stress. Our green zone can be widened with mindful practice. It expands the more we become aware of it, and more awareness helps us to practice returning to it when we become dysregulated.

As parents, take notice of when you and your child are approaching the limits of your green zone. Notice when you cross that threshold. If you have a reactive child who moves easily into the red zone or blue zone, help them learn about their green zone and develop some visualizing and soothing strategies so they can practice returning to it again and again.

You can learn more from Dr. Bryson's blog here and from her books: The Whole-Brain Child; The Yes Brain; No-Drama Discipline; and The Power of Showing Up (to be released in January 2020).

Have a great week!

Assistant Head of Lower School—Academics

From the Division Head

This week's entry is hard for me to write because my feelings about your childrens' recent slam poetry performances are deep and complex. I literally walked out of performances this week with goosebumps on my skin and tears in my eyes. Your students confidently and passionately shared stories and feelings with classmates and teachers, and no topic was off limits. With teachers' and coaches' help, students wrote and performed about dyslexia, loss of loved ones, relationships, overcoming challenges, refugees, and so much more.

Throughout the week, I heard a few students bemoaning their impending recitations—but when it was time to perform, they brought their full selves to the effort. Moreover, the respect and appreciation students showed for one another throughout the week was impressive. Your children and their teachers created and cultivated an environment where even the most reluctant participants felt comfortable enough to share pieces of their inner selves.

If you have not had the chance to see your child perform his or her poem, I strongly encourage you to do so! Weeks like these are special, and I am so grateful to be a part of the St. Francis community.

Best regards,

Chris Bertha, MEd
Head of Middle School

From the Director of Fine Arts

Who done it? We all did.

Clue! The Musical completed a seven-show, sold-out run last Sunday and was a resounding success. Just as we learned who did it, in what room, and with what weapon, we learned about ourselves. We learned what it feels like to work as one ensemble. We also learned the invaluable, and nearly unteachable, lesson of follow-through. We all "rolled the dice" and played "the cards we were dealt" and came together to build ramps, make props, move furniture, hang lights, build platforms, plan meals, deliver snacks, take photos, and make playbills together—not to mention rehearsing and performing the actual show! I relished the sight of parents and faculty working under the direction of our student leaders to reach a goal. Then, we all undid everything and left no trace. My favorite quote of strike was Sarah Anderson announcing, "Freshman parents, you are officially initiated!" I am proud to have pledged myself to be a part of this community of talented young artists and parents.

I am equally honored to work with a fantastic group of art colleagues who regularly answer my call with, "Yes, and...!" Thank you, Krissy Richmond and Kathy Elder, for your trust and your commitment to making something dynamic in the Upper School Arts Program. The Upper School arts team has something exceptional—you. Thank you to Steve Lovejoy for clearing the way and allowing the Andrews House as a venue for the production. I cannot imagine this production being done in a traditional theatre setting. Thank you to the facilities staff, Curt Wissmiller and Jose Alcala, for troubleshooting. We are unbelievably fortunate to have T Riley as a partner in the athletics department, and we recognize his support and the support of the Upper School team.

Finally, thank you to the generous parents and all who volunteered to take on production-related duties. We all know who you are, and we are indebted to you. A particular word of appreciation for those "swag bag" thank-you gifts. You know us too well!

As we move away from the show, be prepared for the post-show doldrums to set in. We miss them and they miss each other already. That is the bittersweet ephemeral beauty of live performance. This was a "you had to be there" experience that defies description, so I have included some photos to remind us of our time together (view photo #1, photo #2, and photo #3).

If you thought the US musical was fun, the "art car" is right around the corner (hint, hint).

See you at the art car,

Justin Doran
Director of Fine Arts
