We have been monitoring active and year-to-date COVID cases in the St. Francis community and are pleased to report that our data has been trending downward since mid-September.

- As people for others, we will support all students and faculty who continue to wear masks.
- Please understand that, at any time, we may transition back to a mask-required policy if there are significant changes to our institutional data or to a specific division or classroom.
- With questions, please email HealthResponse@StFrancisHouston.org.

Thank you for your continued partnership in the health and safety of our community.

From the Head of Curriculum and Instruction

I hope everyone had a restful weekend! I am excited to have the opportunity to write for Wolf Watch this week and share a bit with you about our schoolwide literacy approach.

From Pre-Primary to twelfth grade, our teachers share a fundamental philosophical belief about how children learn all aspects of literacy. This is no accident, as the core of any effective curriculum is alignment of content, consistency of instructional practices, and assurance that the curriculum is steeped in research-informed methodologies.

Over the course of many years, we have been working on this alignment process. The first stages involved examining practices in each of our divisions and determining whether what we were doing met the above-mentioned criteria. Adjustments, changes, and a great deal of professional development have taken place—all of which have resulted in a highly aligned literacy approach for each of our learners.

Our Primary School bases its literacy approach around Rice University's School Literacy and Culture program, which immerses our youngest Wolves in student-centered, literacy-rich experiences throughout the school day. Daily in Primary School, our students have multiple opportunities to build their literacy skills as they learn that what they say can be written and what is written can be read. Engaging with the morning message, dictating daily news, participating in journaling activities, having their stories taken and acted out by classmates, and listening to and responding to a variety of children's literature are just a few of the literacy experiences you might see in Primary School classrooms throughout the day. This early literacy approach dovetails seamlessly into our Lower School curriculum.

Our Lower and Middle School teachers utilize reading and writing workshops out of Teachers College, Columbia University. The majority of our teachers have attended the weeklong reading or writing institutes, and many have attended both. One of the Upper School English teachers also attended a weeklong seminar on writing in Upper School to continue this alignment between Middle and Upper School.

The mission of Teachers College, consistent with that of Rice's School Literacy and Culture program, is to provide students with authentic opportunities for powerful and joyful engagement with literacy, therefore developing lifelong readers and writers. The program is based on decades of research, curriculum development, student choice, and critical attention to methods of instruction, centered around the idea that one size does not fit all. This work centers on young people developing ownership of the learning process; learning skills in phonics, grammar, comprehension, and the craft of writing; and transferring their learning across the curriculum and throughout their lives.

In a workshop classroom, you will see teachers:

- Addressing each child's learning, allowing for every level of academic development and never placing a ceiling on achievement;
- Explicitly teaching strategies students will use not only the day they are taught but also whenever else they need them;
- Supporting small-group work and conferring, with multiple opportunities for differentiating instruction;
- Tapping into the power of a learning community as a way to bring each learner along at his or her own pace;
- Building choice- and assessment-based learning into the very design of the curriculum; and
- Engaging students in meaningful and authentic independent work so that teachers are able to coach individuals and lead small groups.

The routines and structures of reading and writing workshops are kept simple and predictable so that the teacher can focus on the complex work of teaching in a responsive manner to accelerate achievement for all learners. Teachers coach students in this work; design powerful and active curricular opportunities; and continue to learn from collaborators, researchers, other teachers, and children.

This approach continues into our Upper School English courses, as they blend structures from workshops into courses deliberately aligned to progress through finding voice; appreciating stylistic elements; writing to persuade and inform; and, finally, focusing on sophistication in the students' writing, while also recognizing audience and purpose. Students are given the tools and skills to reflect on their own writing through revision-based writing workshops. Peer-to-peer and teacher-to-student revision are also integral parts of the writing process. Daily writing opportunities are incorporated to build writing fluency and for practice with expression. In their literature studies, students approach texts through essential questions that encourage them to build their own interpretations of a variety of texts and genres. Throughout this process, they think critically, analyze, evaluate, and expand reading and writing skills in an inquiry-based curriculum.

Our Upper School also offers AP English curriculum to ensure our most advanced learners are appropriately challenged. They learn how to understand and evaluate works of fiction, poetry, and drama from various periods and cultures. Reading literary works and writing essays to explain and support analysis of them is a major focus. They work to master the following additional skills, too:

- Reading a text deeply and drawing conclusions from details;
- Identifying the techniques used by an author and their effects;
- Developing an interpretation of a text; and
- Presenting a personal interpretation and making an argument for it in writing.

As you can see, from our youngest learners to our oldest students, we are committed to providing a spiraling, engaging, aligned, and research-informed literacy program where students build lifelong literacy skills and step forward on their unique journeys in learning and life.

As always, feel free to reach out to me if you have any questions!

Cheers!

Carol Christ, MEd
Head of Curriculum and Instruction

Hearing and Vision Screenings Are Tomorrow

St. Francis will be offering vision and hearing screenings on the Couper Campus for students who turned 4 years old by September 1, 2021. Screenings will be provided by

Pine Wood Screening Services LLC tomorrow—Monday, October 18. Here's what you need to know:

- State-certified screeners conduct the screenings during school hours.
- A copy of the results is provided for school files. Students who have not passed a screening will receive a referral form for follow-up with a physician or specialist.
- Students who wear glasses should bring them to school.
- We do not refer to the screening as a “test.” Please help us by doing the same. The teachers will explain the process to our students, and they will discover that they are playing two games with the screeners.
- Screenings are nondiagnostic and are not intended to be an equal alternative to an in-depth exam by a licensed physician or specialist.

If you have any questions, please contact School Nurse Debbie King, RN, via email or at 713.458.6167.

The last day of Middle School fall sports will be Friday, October 22. Students should be prepared to return all issued equipment and cleaned uniforms in a timely manner to their coaches.

Winter sports will begin on Monday, October 25. Students have elected their winter sports choices through a recent survey. More information on winter sport details will be shared via email to team/parent rosters and through next week's Wolf Watch.

From the Head of Curriculum and Instruction

I hope everyone had a restful weekend! I am excited to have the opportunity to write for Wolf Watch this week and share a bit with you about our schoolwide literacy approach.

From Pre-Primary to twelfth grade, our teachers share a fundamental philosophical belief about how children learn all aspects of literacy. This is no accident, as the core of any effective curriculum is alignment of content, consistency of instructional practices, and assurance that the curriculum is steeped in research-informed methodologies.

Over the course of many years, we have been working on this alignment process. The first stages involved examining practices in each of our divisions and determining whether what we were doing met the above-mentioned criteria. Adjustments, changes, and a great deal of professional development have taken place—all of which have resulted in a highly aligned literacy approach for each of our learners.

Our Primary School bases its literacy approach around Rice University's School Literacy and Culture program, which immerses our youngest Wolves in student-centered, literacy-rich experiences throughout the school day. Daily in Primary School, our students have multiple opportunities to build their literacy skills as they learn that what they say can be written and what is written can be read. Engaging with the morning message, dictating daily news, participating in journaling activities, having their stories taken and acted out by classmates, and listening to and responding to a variety of children's literature are just a few of the literacy experiences you might see in Primary School classrooms throughout the day. This early literacy approach dovetails seamlessly into our Lower School curriculum.

Our Lower and Middle School teachers utilize reading and writing workshops out of Teachers College, Columbia University. The majority of our teachers have attended the weeklong reading or writing institutes, and many have attended both. One of the Upper School English teachers also attended a weeklong seminar on writing in Upper School to continue this alignment between Middle and Upper School.

The mission of Teachers College, consistent with that of Rice's School Literacy and Culture program, is to provide students with authentic opportunities for powerful and joyful engagement with literacy, therefore developing lifelong readers and writers. The program is based on decades of research, curriculum development, student choice, and critical attention to methods of instruction, centered around the idea that one size does not fit all. This work centers on young people developing ownership of the learning process; learning skills in phonics, grammar, comprehension, and the craft of writing; and transferring their learning across the curriculum and throughout their lives.

In a workshop classroom, you will see teachers:

- Addressing each child's learning, allowing for every level of academic development and never placing a ceiling on achievement;
- Explicitly teaching strategies students will use not only the day they are taught but also whenever else they need them;
- Supporting small-group work and conferring, with multiple opportunities for differentiating instruction;
- Tapping into the power of a learning community as a way to bring each learner along at his or her own pace;
- Building choice- and assessment-based learning into the very design of the curriculum; and
- Engaging students in meaningful and authentic independent work so that teachers are able to coach individuals and lead small groups.

The routines and structures of reading and writing workshops are kept simple and predictable so that the teacher can focus on the complex work of teaching in a responsive manner to accelerate achievement for all learners. Teachers coach students in this work; design powerful and active curricular opportunities; and continue to learn from collaborators, researchers, other teachers, and children.

This approach continues into our Upper School English courses, as they blend structures from workshops into courses deliberately aligned to progress through finding voice; appreciating stylistic elements; writing to persuade and inform; and, finally, focusing on sophistication in the students' writing, while also recognizing audience and purpose. Students are given the tools and skills to reflect on their own writing through revision-based writing workshops. Peer-to-peer and teacher-to-student revision are also integral parts of the writing process. Daily writing opportunities are incorporated to build writing fluency and for practice with expression. In their literature studies, students approach texts through essential questions that encourage them to build their own interpretations of a variety of texts and genres. Throughout this process, they think critically, analyze, evaluate, and expand reading and writing skills in an inquiry-based curriculum.

Our Upper School also offers AP English curriculum to ensure our most advanced learners are appropriately challenged. They learn how to understand and evaluate works of fiction, poetry, and drama from various periods and cultures. Reading literary works and writing essays to explain and support analysis of them is a major focus. They work to master the following additional skills, too:

- Reading a text deeply and drawing conclusions from details;
- Identifying the techniques used by an author and their effects;
- Developing an interpretation of a text; and
- Presenting a personal interpretation and making an argument for it in writing.

As you can see, from our youngest learners to our oldest students, we are committed to providing a spiraling, engaging, aligned, and research-informed literacy program where students build lifelong literacy skills and step forward on their unique journeys in learning and life.

As always, feel free to reach out to me if you have any questions!

Cheers!

Carol Christ, MEd
Head of Curriculum and Instruction
